Important Information to Consider Before You Apply

Participation in all three sessions and intersession work is required. The course includes three sessions; the first and last sessions take place in person and the middle session is virtual. It is critically important that you attend all three sessions to ensure you and your fellow participants maximize the experience. Participants must also commit to completing intersession work. A certification of course completion will be given to all graduates at the end of the course.

Participants who gain the most from this course are those who fully engage. We call this “leaning into the work.” The course is not a good fit for people wanting to “check a box” for training or those participating because they were directed to do so.

The training can be challenging given the emphasis on getting out your comfort zone and exploring new ways of seeing yourself and the system you work. We practice creating courageous spaces to do adaptive work, which includes engaging in difficult conversations and introspection into how our behaviors contribute to leadership. This work can be emotionally challenging for many people, and it is also what makes this course so impactful and different from more traditional training. With this in mind, the course is not designed to process deep work on individual or organizational mental health or to heal trauma. We strongly recommend that anyone experiencing recent work or life events causing stress, grief, or anxiety contact the Program Manager to learn more about the course and types of experiences in the training to determine if this is for them or the right time to apply.

We recommend talking to WCLDP alumni to help determine if this program is a good fit for you. The WCLDP website includes the names of alumni who have participated in previous cohorts. A conversation with former participants will give you a sense of what they experienced and help inform your decision to apply. Please reach out to the WCLDP Program Manager for specific contact information.

We hope you'll join us on this leadership journey!
